Table of Contents

Acknowledgements vii

Introduction 11

It could or ought to be different 13

Chapter One 17

Methodology and the Power of the Personal

1. Methodology and the Power of the Personal 19

1.1 Flying Inside the Bottle or Topography of the Self 19

1.2Mapping the Research 56

1.3 Some of the Dilemmas and Conflicts 77

Chapter Two 89

Here I stand

2. Here I Stand 91

2.1 There is a River 92

2.2 Here I Stand: Swimming in a Specific Curricular Progressive River 98

Influences within the Curriculum Sphere 109

2.3 The Emergence of a [Specific Progressive] River 127

Philosophical Influences 170

Influences from Political Science 174

Influences from the New Sociology of Education 177

2.4 There [Really] Was a River 181

Chapter Three 187

General Tensions in the Curriculum Field (1)

3. General Tensions in the Curriculum Field 189

3.1 The Nature of the Conflict 189

3.2 Mind as Muscle Metaphor 209

3.3 Social Changes in the Late XIX Century 216

3.4 The Struggle Over Knowledge Control 221

3.4.1 Fitting for Life is Fitting for College 223

3.4.2 Five Windows of the Soul 233

3.4.3 The Great Army of Incapables 244

3.4.4 The Scientific Razor Blade 254

3.4.5 The Denizens of Slums [Versus] the Graduates of Harvard 260

Chapter Four 269

General Tensions in The Curriculum Field (2)

4.1 A simplistic Tool for a Lethal Phenomenon 271

4.2 The Emergence of Ralph Tyler 301

4.3 The Prosser Resolution 320

4.4 The Geneseo Conference 346

Chapter Five 375

The Long [R]evolution 377

5. 1 The Question of Relevance or one of the Catalysts for a Long (R)evolution 378

5.2 Ideology and Curriculum, Official Knowledge and

Public Democratic Schools: Towards a Political and Pedagogical Trilogy 390

5.3 Hegemony: A Towering Concept 402

5.4 Towards a Curriculum Concept (or not) 421

5.5 Regulating Compromised Knowledge 468

5.6. 'Saying the Unsayable': The Struggle Over Commonsense 533

5.7 Public Democratic Schools 594

Chapter Six 635

A Non-Negotiable Commitment to an Endless [R]evolution 637

6. A Non-Negotiable Commitment to an Endless [R]evolution